Small really can be beautiful!

Our new model is the Cockpit, the latest micro-tourer from Going. The sleek GRP moulded body of this compact two-berth has been designed to provide exceptional aerodynamic and towing qualities but it has plenty of designer appeal too. From the low-profile front end, the Cockpit's lines sweep up and around to the curvy rear with its stylish

Why not get Going?

When the designers at Going launched the Weekend two-berth a few seasons ago, the micro-tourer took the market by storm.

Well designed, practical and providing excellent value for money, the Weekend proved popular with those wanting to upgrade from a tent to their first caravan. For 2007 Going has added another new micro-caravan to its range – the Cockpit – a compact tourer with features and space to spare.

To add extra space inside and further improve towing stability, the wheelbase has been widened. The Cockpit has Al Ko running gear, maintaining the reputation that all Goings have for stable and carefree towing. Beneath the entrance door is a carrier which holds the standard spare wheel and tyre. Two rear corner steadies provide stable pitching, while alloy wheels complement the bold coach lines and graphics.

The rear entrance door has a window and comes complete with a useful storage basket. A pop-up roof gives extra headroom above the kitchen and wardrobe area. There's a spacious wardrobe with storage underneath for the loo, which is included as standard.

The kitchen features a two-burner hob and stainless steel sink unit with a useful amount of work surface and shelves for storage. A cool box is provided for those long, hot summer days and there's a mains electric hookup via an inlet on the offside of the tourer.

The Cockpit's front lounge has wrap-around seating with a swivel table. Two will find dining in the Cockpit a pleasure, while at nighttime the dinette converts into a large double bed, complete with more storage underneath.

Easy to tow with many smaller cars, the Cockpit is great for days out, weekends away or extended touring.
